Electrospun acrylic nanofibers with magnetic nanoparticles for biomedical applications. In this study, we fabricated an electrospun nanofibrous scaffold by combining the biocompatibility of poly(ϵ -caprolactone) (PCL) and the encapsulation property of carboxymethyl chitosan (CMCS) in combination with magnetite (Fe₃O₄) nanoparticles. The encapsulation property of CMCS enables formation of a composite nanofibers that are capable of holding nanoscaled iron oxide particles. The fibrous morphology of the fabricated scaffolds was characterized via scanning electron microscopy (SEM) and transmission electron microscopy (TEM). In vitro cytotoxicity and hemolytic activity tests were performed to analyze cell viability on the scaffolds, and the in vitro release of Fe₃O₄ nanoparticles was investigated via inductively coupled plasma optical emission spectrometry (ICP-OES). The prepared composite nanofibers were implanted in rats for biocompatibility and immunotoxicity tests. The results indicated that the nanofibrous structures are biocompatible and hemocompatible. Furthermore, the ICP-OES results demonstrated that the iron content of the biocomposite fibers is 72.45±3.66wt%. Magnetic nanoparticles were successfully released from the biocomposite fibers at a sustained rate with an initial burst, indicating their potential for applications in the field of smart drug delivery and targeting.

Q: How to filter a query using Criteria API in Symfony
I am trying to filter the results of a query by a property (e.g. `$array['xxx']`) in Symfony, but I don't see any documentation on how to do this. Does anybody know how to do this?
A: If you need to filter by a value, you can use CriteriaBuilder as in the manual. I mean, if you only need to use : `$query = Doctrine_Core::create()->getRepository('AppBundle:Article')->findBy(array('author'));`
`$query->createQueryBuilder('a')->where('a.author = :author')->setParameter('author', '`

High temperature and high pressure in the gas turbine system may cause thermal damage to turbine blades, which are typically made from nickel-based superalloys. Replacing the blades is a costly but necessary practice for the sake of the safety of the engine. In some cases, however, the blades must be removed in order to replace them with a blade made of a different alloy. If the turbine blades are to be removed, the blades must be cut by using diamond saws or electrodes. This can be done in an open-air environment or in a hot chamber. Since the saw blades and the turbine blades have different densities, the saw blades tend to float on the turbine blades. This condition, in turn, can require additional anti-friction measures, such as bolt and nuts, for the saw blades to be held securely in the path of the turbine blades. The detaching and installing of the turbine blades is not easy and, usually, takes a long time. In addition, since the turbine blades are generally heavy, they must be lifted by a crane and placed in a vehicle for their transportation from a factory to a machine shop in a repairing site. This process is relatively difficult and expensive. Japanese Unexamined Patent Application Publication No. 2006-231593 discloses a gas turbine engine having a turbine blade attachment structure that facilitates the removal of the turbine blades and the attachments to the blades. The turbine blade attachment structure has blades secured to the turbine disk and detached blades that detach the blades from the turbine disk and holders for holding the detached blades. The holders and detached blades are secured to the turbine disk by coupling mechanisms that are provided on opposite sides of the turbine disk, and the holders are disposed on opposite sides of the turbine disk so as to hold the detached blades in a manner that enables them to be removed along with the detached blades in one go. Because the turbine blades and the holders are secured to the turbine disk, it is necessary to provide a curved slot in each of the holders. The curved slot can be formed between the blades of the turbine disk and the holder. The curved slot is used for removing the blade from the turbine disk. In the process of removing the blade, each holder and the blade is turned by means of a tool such as a hammer. The reason for making the curved slot between the holder and the blade is that the holder must be rotated together with the blade when the blade is removed from the turbine disk.
